WORLD'S RICHEST COMMUNITY

Happy Osage Indians in Oklahoma.

The richest community in the world is right here in America, and not made up of financiers, Wall street men, or railroad magnates, either; but of Indians, who know little about modern methods of speculation and who are throwing their wealth to the winds in a manner that would almost make the son of a magnate green with envy. These Indians are the 2200 Osages who reside in Oklahoma, who were born rich, and who are proving to be more lucrative than a gold mine to the white men who have learned the art of separating the Indian and his cash. Were it not for the federal government, which has exercised a paternal restraint over the Osages, they would by this time have sunk into poverty. But Uncle Sam has seen to it that they should not have all their money at their disposal at once; he has financed matters for them, and for that reason they are the richest community on earth.

Each member of the Osage tribe has in his possession a homestead of 160 acres and 490 acres of surplus land, none of which is worth a cent less than $10 an acre. Then, besides this, they have in the treasury of the United States about $9,000,000. Their real property is extremely valuable. Nature having favored them by depositing there natural gas, petroleum, semianthracite coal, zinc, lead, copper, oilite, cement rock, building stone and brick clay. The natural gas supply is so generous that most of the time the jets in the houses and on the streets are left burning night and day.

There are about 800 full-bloods in the tribe, and they take a pride in keeping up the customs of their ancestors. They hold virtuously to their respect for order of Hohpoh, and the women carry their wealthy little packages on boards on their backs, sometimes scolding them in Indian jargon, but never striking them or punishing them in any other way. It is a noticeable fact that they never resort to the billingsgate that many white mothers make use of in correcting their offspring. These full-bloods are nabobs in every sense of the word. If their land is filled, they hire some one to till it; they hire some one to put his hand to the patch any more than Rockefeller and Carnegie do. It is an extremely short distance that Mr. Indian can be persuaded to walk; he has forsaken the ways of his ancestors who bestrode the bare back of a bucking broncho; he rides on the soft cushions of a carriage or motor car. Few indeed are the shows that come near which he does not attend, and he shows the same fondness for firewater that his progenitors revealed when first their lips pressed the neck of a booze

The town of Tawhusk, Okl., is where these wealthy redskins reside, and when there is nothing doing in the balliwick among the Indian citizens, it may be surmised that the proverbial cold day in July has arrived. With plenty of money and sporting proclivities, the Indians make things lively enough. They own 1,000,000 surplus acres of land which have been the favorite of Nature, who has blessed them with crystal springs and flowing creeks. But the Indians say they want to sell off their surplus land and get their hands on the ready cash; so Uncle Sam has arranged to put it on sale for them in the autumn, and then for a little while, it may be guessed, the sharks will fatten on the money of the Osage.

A fairly good number of these Indians speak the English tongue, though they are by no means students of elegant expression and have no penchant for Shakespeare or Milton. They do not in the main become habitual drunkards, and are on the whole a very healthy tribe. There are a few who are dying of tuberculosis. But of the whole 2200 there are but two who are blind and one who is a deaf mute. Not many white communities can show such a health record as that. Among them are many male giants in stature, and they walk with the proverbial straightness of an Indian. The squaws, however, are given to walking with a waddling motion. On the whole the Osages are not as solemn as some of the other tribes, and they seem to be pretty happy. One would think that they ought to be, for they are favored as they are. Up to a few years ago it was a common practice for unscrupulous white men to marry the young Indian girls in order to possess themselves of their money, but a stop has been put to this form of swindling; fortune-hunters must now apply elsewhere.
